MARRIED LIFE ON $80 A MONTH

Mrs. Eva Leonard's Story of Married Life on $80 a Month—Different Kinds of Brushes for Use in the Kitchen—To Keep Bristles Stiff—Odds and Ends—Hints in Cooking.

Molly Sutner sat in the cushioned rocker in the sunny sitting room of the Morton farmhouse. There was a faint odor of burning wood in the air, a scene that she loved. She gazed off over the snowy landscape to the blue-gray rim of the bare forest. She felt stronger than she had at any time since her sickness; since Mrs. Morton had carried her off to rest, away from the worries and the responsibilities that the old lady insisted were keeping her from getting strong. Mrs. Morton had given her every care in a matter of fact way as if caring for sick and disabled women was a regular part of the day's work and needed no comment. The old lady had finished her afternoon work and drew her sewing chair up to the sunny window near her guest.

"You are feeling more like a human being with red blood today, eh?" she asked, peering over her spectacles at the slender girlish figure before her.

"Oh, yes, thank you, Mrs. Morton."

"A NEW PAIR IF THEY RIP."

I must be getting back to take care of my little boy. Your daughter and Mrs. Elison have had a long siege of it, caring for him, and you have been so kind—Molly's voice broke.

"Now, now, none of that! It has been a treat to have you here and see you perk up and stop looking as limp as a cloth. All you needed was a chance; to take the rest cure and then begin all over again. Are you feeling equal to a little sermon today? You see I had an object in bringing you out here. She smiled grimly over her spectacles.

"Perhaps you could help me dear Mrs. Morton; you are so wise and strong." There were tears in the blue eyes that looked out of the window.

"I am an old woman. If a woman hasn't picked up some wisdom in half a century of strenuous living, she must be a fool, and I'm not that." She nodded her head so fiercely that Molly smiled. But it is another thing to pass on what you have gained. I haven't succeeded many times, but I never stop trying. You seem teachable." Again she paused and looked at Molly over her glasses.

"I am; do try and help me. I am afraid to go back. I have made such a mess of my life. I'm afraid I will tangle things again when I go home."

"You were just an untalented child when you were married. You thought all you had to do was to hold out your hands and blessings and happiness would be put in them. You have learned that they are not handed out, that must be earned." The old face looked very grim.

"I was very ignorant, and now we are added with these heavy debts." "One thing life has taught me is that when we make mistakes we must face the consequences, and the only thing to do is to stand up bravely and take the medicine. Debt is wrong and wrongdoers must suffer. When you have learned the lesson this experience is to teach, you will never need to go through it again. Now since you can't change the fact of being in debt, change your attitude toward it. Be glad of the lessons this enforced economy is teaching you. Young people of today are so afraid of saving. They call it stinginess and use it as a term of reproach. I learned to take a real pleasure in making one dollar do the work of two."

"But I do not know how to save," interrupted Molly pathetically. "Set that as your task. Learn to save. There should be a real excitement in learning to do the hard, unaccustomed things that life sets as your tasks. If you slump into your self every time a hard condition comes into your life you will never succeed. Overcome hard conditions. He that overcometh shall inherit life now and hereafter." The old face looked full of fire and force as she gazed out of the window.

a pan, sufficient in quantity to cover the bristles of the brush but not to reach the backs, which perhaps would be injured by the water. Add to the water three tablespoonfuls of ammonia for each quart of water, then put the brushes in to soak for ten minutes. Rinse them well in cold water and set them to dry, with the bristles downward. In washing hair brushes, be careful not to use soap. Instead, dissolve a piece of soap in warm water and allow the bristles of the brush to stand in the water. The bristles will become white and clean. When allowed to dry you will find that the bristles will be just as stiff and firm as ever they were and the backs of the brushes will not have been hurt by soap getting down into the places where the bristles are set into the backs. An old toothbrush is a pretty good thing to save. It may often be found very useful in the kitchen around clean-up times, in getting into little niches where the ordinary brush or cloth would not reach.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Lettinase a la Madras, a dinner savory, is soft rice wrapped in little slices of bacon with capers, and served on toast.

When green peas are going out of season they lose the agreeable sweetness of the earlier supplies that are at first obtainable. This may be restored to some extent at least by adding a lump of sugar to the water in which they are to be boiled.

In roasting quails the approved method is to wrap the tiny bird in a thin slice of fat bacon, fastened with skewers. Fat Egyptian quails are dainty and acceptable morsels at this time of year.

Salad à l'Anvers (Antwerp salad) is made of lettuce with shreds of chicken, ham and capers, in mayonnaise sauce, garnished with slices of potatoes.

The suggestion is made that a fowl for roasting is much enjoyed by rubbing it with lemon juice and then basting frequently with cream or milk. Filets of beef a la Grande Bretagne are larded, spiced and stuffed with macaroni and horseradish sauce, and are served with brown sauce and potato chips.

Caper sauce with roast mutton may seem incongruous, but it is excellent nevertheless. With boiled mutton, of course, the piquant caper is a recognized adjunct.

HEAVY FIGHTING AROUND GORIZIA

London, Dec. 3.—The Italians, fighting under unparalleled conditions, are keeping up their violent attacks upon the Austrian position defending Gorizia. The Gorizia and Tolmino bridgeheads are under almost continual assault.

Dispatches reaching here tonight from points near the front tell of the tremendous handicaps under which the Italians are fighting. An icy gale of more than sixty miles an hour is whistling across the mountain crests where the Italians are attacking the almost impregnable positions of the Austrians. So strong is the wind that occasions the men have been forced to lie flat to save themselves from being carried over the edge of precipices and hurled to death in the deep canyons of the Carso.

The losses on both sides outlive anything before seen in war when the comparatively short front is taken into consideration. Thousands are buried under the snow, where their bodies will lie until spring. Wounded men freeze to death before aid can reach them.

Fight for Nine Days. The Italians continue their attacks around Osavla, where for nine days and nights the fighting has been continuous. Bodies are piled high everywhere. A dispatch to the Idea Nazionale of Udina, describing the fight, says:

"In a fight near Osavla two battalions of Hungarians were wiped out. Upon the previous day the Italians had captured a pass between Sabotino and Osavla, driving out the Austrians."

The next morning the Austrian commander hurled two battalions against the positions with orders to the men not to return to Gorizia if they should fail to retake it.

The Italians prepared an ambush after the Hungarians had penetrated the pass they found their retreat cut off by machine guns. In a space of thirty square yards the Italians counted 450 bodies. Of the 150 others only 50 escaped."

Say Latins Were Repulsed. The Austrian war office tonight reports the repulse of the new Italian attacks upon the Osavla sector. The official statement says:

"After the repeated unsuccessful attacks of the last few days against the bridgeheads of Tolmino and our mountain positions north thereof, quiet prevailed there yesterday."

"Near San Martino Italian detachments which approached with sandbags were annihilated."

"Gorizia again has been subjected to an especially vigorous bombardment, which, in the center of the town, caused considerable fresh damage."

An important gain upon the Austrian front, where part of the Austrian trenches have been occupied and a surprise attack by Alpine troops in the Ledra valley are chronicled in the Rome official statement. It says:

"In the Letro valley one of our detachments of Alpini descended a precipice north of Pre by means of ropes and surprised the enemy, who had been reinforced, and drove him back afterwards firmly occupying the position."

Minor actions ending in our favor are reported from northwest of Roncengo, in the Valley of Sunaga, in the Rienz-Flachbach ridge, and the Valley of Seebach in Galitz."

"Our infantry occupied in front of Tolmino a part of an enemy entrenchment on Santa Maria hill, capturing rifles and munitions. There is no change in the rest of the front."
